2017 SYMPOSIUM

ADMINISTRATIVE LAWMAKING IN THE 21ST CENTURY

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 2017 | 9:00AM - 3:45PM

PATRICK F. McCARTAN COURTROOM

UNIVERSITY OF NOTRE DAME LAW SCHOOL

The Notre Dame Law Review has a long tradition of hosting symposia that bring together well-respected and diverse speakers around a variety of timely and thought-provoking legal topics. Held each fall semester, the annual Symposium provides an environment for intellectual engagement and an opportunity to wrestle with pressing legal issues. Traditionally, each participant will publish an article in the Law Review's annual Symposium issue.

ADMINISTRATIVE LAWMAKING IN THE 21ST CENTURY

The Symposium will look forward to the future with respect to administrative law. Panels of leading academics and distinguished practitioners will reflect on the fact that we are arguably at a crossroads in how we make regulatory law and policy — and address, among other issues, the effect this has on how we design and staff administrative agencies, Chevron Step Two's domain, nonenforcement of the law, and the meaning of provisions limiting presidential removal of administrative officers. Judge Tom Hardiman of the Third Circuit will provide a judicial perspective on recent developments within administrative law and thoughtful discussion of the contributors' views.
